

Cumberland Show sees Launch of Finance for Renewables

Farmers in Cumbria are being given a huge opportunity to diversify and go green – and in the process to capitalise on the attractive government incentives including the Feed-in-Tariff (FITs) and the forthcoming Renewable Heat Incentive (RHI).

EcoLogicLiving have joined forces with Christopher Harrison Wealth Management to launch 'Ecologicfinance'; finance for renewable energy solutions, opening up the renewable energy market to farmers and domestic households, through a finance scheme which can pay for itself from day one.

At the moment, although many farms are looking towards renewable energy from an investment point of view because of the attractive revenue and payback times, which can be as little as 4 years, there is very little support for the up-front capital costs of purchasing the kit, whether this be a domestic biomass boiler right up to a large wind turbine or solar PV array.

EcoLogicLiving offer a one-stop-shop approach to renewable energy solutions, offering a full range of options including solar photovoltaic panels, wind turbines, biomass boilers and heat pumps and complimentary systems such as underfloor heating. Being truly brand and technology independent, the team ensure exactly the right solution for each project.

Having an in house design, installation and maintenance team, and now offering an integrated finance package, means that customers need only deal with one company, taking the hassle out of choosing and installing renewable energy solutions.

Christopher Harrison Wealth Management, established by local entrepreneur and farmer Christopher Harrison (pictured left), as one of its services enables retailers and individuals to easily access a range of loans. The company prides itself on being able to de-mystify the world of personal and business finance; practicing financial guru's Ed Jardine and David Finan at Christopher Harrison Wealth Management provide truly unbiased advice and support on any financial matter. Chris was impassioned to add a financial business to his group of companies stating 'I feel the financial world needs to change and get back to good old fashion values founded on exceptional personal service and trust.'

Finance schemes will be available for small and medium sized businesses as well as individual households.
